

Optimizing IT Resources Through Infrastructure, Processes, and People

Rocket Software surveyed 275 U.S. based IT directors and VPs in companies with 1,000+ employees, asking them about their current IT challenges and approach to modernizing IT infrastructure.

All businesses strive to be as optimized as possible, fine tuning strategies and processes to improve efficiency and cut costs. Optimization of IT resources — namely infrastructure, processes, and people — is crucial to fuel digital transformation and modernization.

Infrastructure: Organizations are using a hybrid cloud approach to optimize resources, investments, and costs.

An astounding 93% of IT leaders said they believe their organization needs to embrace a hybrid infrastructure model that spans from mainframe to cloud.

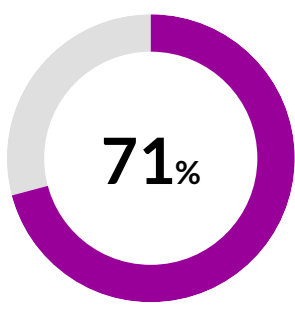

Processes: IT leaders are looking optimize workflows, reduce costs, and deliver better employee and customer experiences.

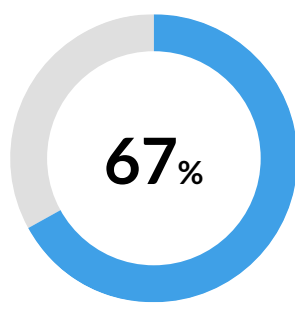

Data and Content Management is a priority for 60% of IT leaders, DevOps is a priority for 58% of them, and automation is a priority for 57%.

IT leaders measure success as follows — all of which can be achieved through automation:

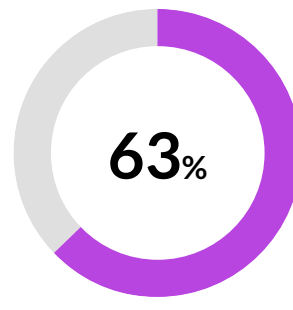

Increased efficiency

Optimized resources

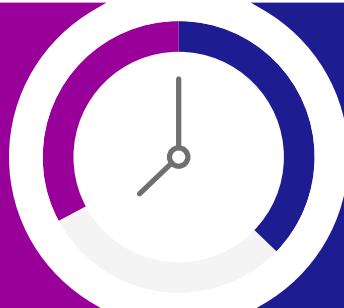

Reduced risk

IT leaders spend needless amounts of time on manual data entry and analysis, which could be reclaimed through automation:

30%

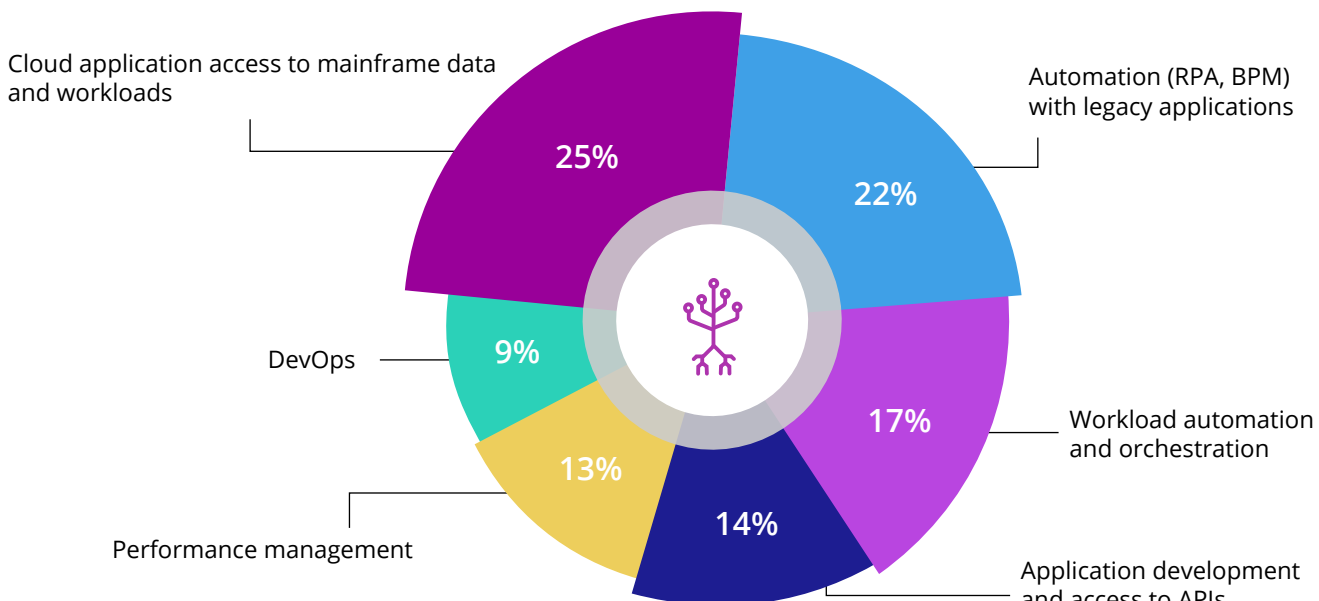

spend 6-10 hours per week

33%

spend 11-15 hours per week

Tools IT leaders need most to help them modernize their IT infrastructure:

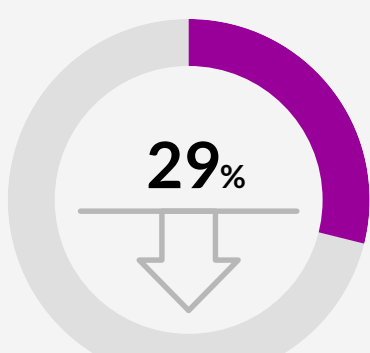

People: With the right tools, IT leaders can eliminate dependence on expensive, hard-to-find expertise. This also provides leadership with the insights needed to improve decision-making.

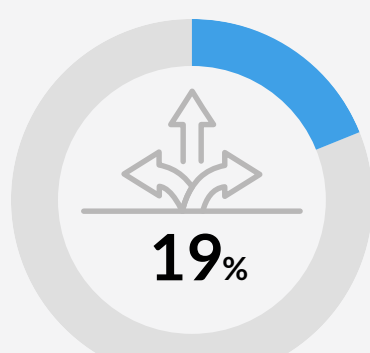

Tools like DevOps and process automation help manage and mitigate risk — a critical focus for technology professionals.

IT leaders believe automation — which leads to optimization — can:

Reduce human error in processes

Repurpose (human) resources
